This Spanish Type Has Unusual Appeal

THE LOS ANGELES, NO. 722

TYPICALLY Californian and in accord with the Spanish ideals a more conveniently and tastefully arranged bungalow than this would be difficult to find. In anywhere save the Southwest it would be really an unusual type. There, however, it is but another of a variety that seems to be infinite. And yet, in this home of the bungalow, rarely will you encounter one so completely pleasing in arrangement and exterior appeal. The plan tells its own story most effectively and convincingly. Like all bungalows of the Los Angeles district, it lacks heating equipment, the one dependence being the large open grate in the living room, which can be utilized on cool evenings, when they happen along. In the almost completely isolated location of the living room is an interesting architectural feature quite out of the ordinary, yet not without its advantages. The recreation hall and the entrance tower adds another unusual touch of interest. And the snug little den hidden away all by itself offers always a retreat where the fullest degree of privacy is assured. The arrangement of dining room, breakfast room and kitchen is in every respect ideal, the enclosed service porch adding tremendously to the convenience. Two large bed rooms and the bath complete one of the most attractive floor plans we have offered in many months. Little could be desired that is not provided here. And as a truly California type this bungalow fills the eye.
